

Revelation 22:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God.

Analysis

The angel's self-identification as 'fellowservant' emphasizes equality among God's servants despite different roles. Angels and prophets both serve God; neither deserves worship. The command 'worship God' redirects all honor to its proper object. Reformed theology emphasizes that all created beings, regardless of glory or function, are servants—only the Creator deserves worship. The inclusive 'them which keep the sayings of this book' emphasizes believers' coequal status with prophets and angels as God's servants. Unity in service should direct collective worship toward God.

Historical Context

Hierarchical cultures naturally elevated mediators of revelation (prophets, angels). This angelic self-lowering countered human tendency to worship impressive spiritual beings. Early church fathers cited this passage against angel worship. The emphasis on keeping Revelation's sayings stressed obedient response rather than speculative fascination as proper reaction to apocalyptic visions.

Study Questions

1. How does the angel's self-description as 'fellowservant' challenge hierarchical thinking that elevates some believers above others?
2. What does the command to 'worship God' (not admire revelations or honor mediators) teach about proper response to Scripture?
