

Revelation 9:18

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.

Analysis

The threefold plague (fire, smoke, brimstone) killing a third of mankind demonstrates judgment's massive scale. The fraction 'third part' appears throughout Revelation's judgments, indicating partial rather than total destruction—still leaving opportunity for repentance. These plagues parallel the Egyptian plagues' escalation. Reformed theology sees such judgments as common grace warnings; God restrains full wrath while offering space for repentance (Romans 2:4). The staggering death toll underscores sin's seriousness and coming wrath's terror. Yet the impenitent remain hardened (9:20-21), demonstrating human depravity's extent.

Historical Context

Ancient warfare often involved burning cities and mass casualties, but this vision's scale exceeds any historical battle. The imagery communicated to first-century readers that coming judgments would surpass even Rome's devastating military campaigns. The partial nature (one-third) emphasized that these were warning judgments, not yet final consummation.
