

Romans 11:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?

Analysis

For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world—apobolē (ἀποβολή, "casting away") parallels "fall" and "diminishing" (v. 12). Israel's temporary rejection facilitated katallagē kosmou (καταλλαγὴ κόσμου, "reconciling of the world")—Gentile salvation. Paul now poses his strongest a fortiori argument: what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead? (ei mē zōē ek nekrōn, εἰ μὴ ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν).

The phrase "life from the dead" could be metaphorical (spiritual revival) or literal (physical resurrection). Many Reformed interpreters see this as the general resurrection—Israel's restoration will coincide with or trigger the eschaton. Others see it as metaphorical: the revival of Israel will be so glorious it resembles resurrection. Either way, Paul envisions Israel's future salvation as cosmically significant, ushering in the ultimate redemption. If their rejection blessed the world massively, their acceptance will bring eschatological consummation.

Historical Context

Jewish expectation linked national restoration to the resurrection of the dead (Ezekiel 37:1-14; Daniel 12:2). Paul uses resurrection language to convey the magnitude of Israel's future salvation—it will be nothing short of new creation.
