

Romans 11:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For if the firstfruit be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches.

Analysis

For if the firstfruit be holy, the lump is also holy—aparche (ἀπαρχή, "firstfruit") refers to the firstfruits offering (Numbers 15:17-21). When the first portion is consecrated, the whole batch shares that holiness. Paul likely refers to the patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, Jacob) as the firstfruit, making their descendants (the lump, phyrana, φύραμα) holy—set apart to God. Alternatively, the Jewish remnant (vv. 1-5) could be the firstfruit, guaranteeing the future salvation of the whole.

The second metaphor reinforces this: and if the root be holy, so are the branches (rizā, ῥίζα, "root"). The root is the patriarchs; the branches are their descendants. Paul establishes covenant continuity: God's election of the fathers guarantees His faithfulness to their children. This sets up the olive tree metaphor (vv. 17-24). The holiness Paul speaks of is covenantal, not necessarily salvific for every individual—but it means God has not abandoned Israel corporately.

Historical Context

The firstfruits offering symbolized consecrating the entire harvest to God. By extension, the patriarchs' election consecrated the nation. This covenantal holiness explains God's ongoing commitment despite Israel's unfaithfulness—He remains faithful to His sworn promises (Deuteronomy 7:7-8).
