

Romans 12:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord;

Analysis

Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; This verse contains three staccato commands on Christian diligence. Not slothful in business (τῇ σπουδῇ μὴ ὀκνηροί, tē spoudē mē oknēroi) literally reads 'not lazy in zeal' or 'not hesitant in earnestness'—the 'business' here isn't commerce but eager activity in God's service. Paul condemns spiritual laziness, the sluggish half-heartedness that plagues religious duty. Second, fervent in spirit (τῷ πνεύματι ζέοντες, tō pneumati zeontes) uses the verb 'to boil'—fiery, passionate devotion. The spirit could be the human spirit or the Holy Spirit; either way, genuine Christianity burns hot, not lukewarm (Revelation 3:15-16).

The third phrase, serving the Lord (τῷ κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες, tō kyriō douleontes), grounds all activity in slavery to Christ—douleuō means 'to serve as a slave.' This isn't self-generated enthusiasm but slavery to a Master. Our zeal is directed toward him, our diligence expended for his glory. Some manuscripts read 'serving the time' (kairō), meaning 'seizing opportunities,' but 'Lord' (kyriō) is better attested. Regardless, the verse combats both frantic activism (zeal without serving the Lord) and passive quietism (serving the Lord without zeal).

Historical Context

The Greco-Roman world valued otium (leisure) for aristocrats while slaves and laborers performed manual work. Jewish tradition emphasized diligent Torah study and faithful worship. Paul synthesizes these: Christians should be zealous, not lazy, but their zeal serves Christ, not worldly ambition. In the Roman church, some may have lapsed into spiritual complacency, treating faith as cultural identity rather than passionate devotion. Paul's exhortation recalls Jesus's rebuke of Laodicean lukewarmness (Revelation 3:14-22).

Study Questions

1. In what areas of Christian life have you become 'slothful'—prayer, Scripture reading, evangelism, service—and what reignites your diligence?
2. How would you describe the temperature of your spiritual life: cold, lukewarm, or 'fervent'—and what cultivates holy passion?
3. Are you 'serving the Lord' in your daily work, or merely serving yourself, your employer, or others' expectations?
