

Romans 12:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good.

Analysis

Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Paul transitions from spiritual gifts to practical ethics, beginning with love. The Greek phrase love be without dissimulation (ἡ ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος, hē agapē anypokritos) literally means 'unhypocritical love' or 'sincere love'—anypokritos means 'without a mask,' contrasting genuine affection with theatrical pretense. Christian love isn't sentimental feeling but active, sacrificial commitment to another's good. It must be authentic, not performance. Two participles follow, describing what sincere love looks like: abhor that which is evil (ἀποστυγοῦντες τὸ πονηρόν, apostygountes to ponēron)—the verb means 'detest utterly, shrink from with horror.' True love hates sin.

The second command, cleave to that which is good (κολλώμενοι τῷ ἀγαθῷ, kollōmenoi tō agathō), uses a strong verb meaning 'glue oneself to, cling to'—the same word for marriage union (Genesis 2:24 LXX). Love isn't morally neutral; it requires moral discrimination. You can't love people well without hating the evil that destroys them and clinging to the good that blesses them. This verse introduces a cascade of practical exhortations (verses 9-21) on how transformed minds (verse 2) produce transformed relationships.

Historical Context

Greco-Roman friendship was often transactional—alliances based on mutual benefit, status, or political advantage. Hypocrisy was endemic in Roman social life, where public honor concealed private vice. Jewish law emphasized holiness through separation from evil, but sometimes became pharisaical—external righteousness masking internal corruption. Paul calls Christians to a higher standard: genuine love that both rejects evil and embraces good, rooted not in law but in the renewed mind's discernment of God's will.

Study Questions

1. Where in your relationships might you be wearing a 'mask'—showing affection while harboring resentment, judgment, or selfish motives?
2. How can you better 'abhor evil' in a culture that celebrates moral ambiguity and calls intolerance the only sin?
3. What 'good' should you be 'clinging to' more intentionally—habits, relationships, truth—that bless others and glorify God?
