

Romans 15:23

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But now having no more place in these parts, and having a great desire these many years to come unto you;

Analysis

But now having no more place in these parts (νυνὶ δὲ μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων ἐν τοῖς κλίμασι τούτοις, nyni de mēketi topon echōn en tois klimasi toutois)—Mēketi topon echōn (having no more place) indicates completion: Paul has fulfilled his pioneer church-planting mandate in the eastern Mediterranean. Klimasi (regions, territories) refers to the area from Jerusalem to Illyricum (v. 19). This doesn't mean every person is converted but that churches are established in major centers, capable of evangelizing their regions. Paul's apostolic task—laying foundations (v. 20)—is complete there; others will build on them.

And having a great desire these many years to come unto you (ἐπιποθίαν δὲ ἔχων τοῦ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἔτῶν, epipothian de echōn tou elthein pros hymas apo pollōn etōn)—Epipothian (longing, desire) is strong yearning. Apo pollōn etōn (from many years) indicates this isn't a recent impulse but long-held desire. Paul's missionary strategy required patience: he waited years to visit Rome until strategic timing aligned. This demonstrates disciplined ambition—passionate desires held in check by Spirit-directed priorities.

Historical Context

'Many years' suggests Paul had known about the Roman church and desired to visit since the early-to-mid 50s AD. By 57, with work in the east complete and plans for Spain forming (v. 24), the timing was right. This verse indicates Paul's advance planning and strategic thinking—apostolic ministry wasn't random opportunism but careful, prayerful strategy.

Study Questions

1. What does Paul's sense of 'completion' in one region before moving to another teach about finishing well versus perpetually moving to new challenges?
2. How do you maintain patient, disciplined pursuit of long-held desires while remaining flexible to God's timing?
3. What role does strategic assessment ('no more place') play in discerning ministry transitions versus restless ambition or burnout-driven change?
