

Romans 2:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God;

Analysis

But after thy hardness and impenitent heart—κατὰ δὲ τὴν σκληρότητά σου (kata de tēn sklērotētā sou), literally "according to your hardness." Σκληρότης (sklērotēs) means "hardness/stubbornness," the same root describing Pharaoh's hardened heart (Exodus 4-14 LXX). Ἀμετανόητος καρδία (ametanoētos kardia, "unrepentant heart") combines alpha-privative with "repentance"—a heart refusing to change. Treasurest up unto thyself wrath—the verb θησαυρίζεις (thēsaurízeis, "store up/accumulate") ironically applies 'treasure-gathering' to divine fury.

This verse delivers devastating irony: instead of treasuring up God's goodness (v. 4), the unrepentant accumulate wrath. Every sin unrepented adds to the eschatological storehouse, like compound interest on a debt unpayable. Against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God—ἡμέρα ὀργῆς καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως (hēmera orgēs kai apokalypseōs) refers to final judgment when God's δικαιοκρισία (dikaiokrisia, "righteous judgment") is unveiled.

Paul's language echoes Amos 5:18-20's warning about "the day of the LORD" being darkness, not light, for the unrepentant. The heart—kardia—is Scripture's core of moral identity (Proverbs 4:23, Jeremiah 17:9). A hard heart cannot repent; only God's Spirit can replace the heart of stone with flesh (Ezekiel 36:26).

Historical Context

Jewish apocalyptic literature (Daniel, intertestamental works like 1 Enoch) vividly described the "day of wrath" when God would judge the world. Most Jews expected vindication on that day, with judgment falling on Gentile oppressors. Paul shockingly redirects: unrepentant Jews face the same wrath. The phrase "revelation of the righteous judgment" indicates this judgment is currently hidden but will be unveiled—secrets exposed, motives judged, hypocrisy condemned (Romans 2:16).
