

Romans 2:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Who will render to every man according to his deeds:

Analysis

Who will render to every man according to his deeds—Paul quotes Psalm 62:12 and Proverbs 24:12, affirming the universal principle that God judges κατὰ τὰ ἔργα (kata ta erga, "according to the works"). The future ἀποδώσει (apodōsei, "will render/repay") points to eschatological judgment. This seems paradoxical in a letter championing justification by faith (3:28, 4:5), but Paul's point is that genuine faith produces transformed behavior—judgment by works reveals faith's authenticity.

This principle demolishes any claim that God plays favorites based on ethnicity, religious pedigree, or doctrinal correctness divorced from life transformation. James 2:14-26 parallels this: "faith without works is dead." Paul will argue that no one achieves justification through works (3:20), yet works demonstrate whether professed faith is genuine or hypocritical. The judgment throne evaluates fruit, not mere profession.

The phrase every man (ἐκάστω, hekastō) emphasizes individual accountability—no corporate shield of "Abraham's children" or "church membership." This anticipates verses 9-10's "to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile," universalizing both condemnation and salvation.

Historical Context

Old Testament consistently taught that God judges deeds (Jeremiah 17:10, Ezekiel 18:30). First-century Judaism affirmed this but often coupled it with covenant privilege, creating a two-tiered system: Gentiles judged strictly by works, Jews by covenant mercy. Paul insists on one standard for all. This echoes Jesus's teaching that servants are judged by their stewardship (Matthew 25:14-30, Luke 12:47-48)—knowledge increases accountability.

Study Questions

1. If my salvation is by faith alone, why does Scripture so frequently speak of judgment according to works?
2. What 'deeds' would my life present at God's judgment throne—do they evidence genuine faith or mere profession?
3. How does this universal standard of judgment guard against presumption while driving me to Christ?
