

Romans 3:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

Analysis

There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

Continuing the catena from Psalm 14:2. Ouk estin ho syniōn (οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ συνίων, "there is none who understands")—intellectual corruption. Ouk estin ho ekzētōn ton theon (οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ ἐκζητῶν τὸν θεόν, "there is none who seeks God")—volitional rebellion.

Human depravity is both noetic (affecting the mind) and moral (affecting the will). No one naturally comprehends spiritual truth (1 Corinthians 2:14) or desires God. This contradicts the Pelagian notion of human ability to initiate seeking God. In biblical theology, God always seeks first (Luke 19:10); human seeking is always responsive to preventient grace. Paul's anthropology is bleak: left to ourselves, we neither understand nor desire our Creator.

Historical Context

Against Greek philosophy's optimism about human reason and Jewish confidence in Torah knowledge, Paul asserts radical noetic effects of sin. Even possessing Scripture (v. 2) does not guarantee understanding—spiritual illumination requires divine initiative (2 Corinthians 4:6).

Study Questions

1. How does this verse challenge the popular notion that "everyone is seeking God in their own way"?
2. What does it mean that fallen humans lack both the understanding and desire for God?
3. How should this truth shape your evangelism and apologetics—what must happen before anyone seeks God?
