

Romans 6:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?

Analysis

Know ye not (ē agnoite, ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε)—Paul assumes his readers understand baptism's significance, suggesting early Christian catechesis explained baptism theologically. The phrase baptized into Jesus Christ (eis Christon Iēsoun ebaptisthēmen, εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν ἐβαπτίσθημεν) uses eis (into) indicating incorporation, union, identification—not merely "in the name of."

Baptized into his death (eis ton thanaton autou, εἰς τὸν θάνατον αὐτοῦ)—baptism signifies participation in Christ's death, not just remembering it. This is mystical union theology: the believer is so identified with Christ that His death becomes theirs forensically (for justification) and practically (for sanctification). The aorist passive ebaptisthēmen (we were baptized) points to the historical moment of conversion when believers were incorporated into Christ's death. This isn't baptismal regeneration but recognition that baptism symbolizes and seals the reality of union with Christ.

Historical Context

First-century baptism was immediate upon profession of faith (Acts 2:41, 8:36-38), by full immersion, signifying death and burial with Christ. Unlike Jewish proselyte baptism (self-administered washing), Christian baptism into Christ's death was a radically new concept. The Roman church would have practiced baptism as an initiatory rite marking entrance into the Christian community and identification with Christ's death.
