

Romans 7:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me,
and by it slew me.

Analysis

For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me.—Exēpatēsen (ἐξηπάτησεν, "deceived/beguiled") deliberately echoes Genesis 3:13 (LXX), where Eve says "the serpent deceived me." Paul traces his experience to Eden's pattern: prohibition aroused desire, sin deceived through the commandment, and death resulted. Apekteinen (ἀπέκτεινεν, "killed/slew") intensifies "I died" (v. 9)—sin actively murdered using law as its weapon.

The deception isn't that law was wrong but that sin promised fulfillment through disobedience while concealing death's consequence. Sin perverted the good commandment into an instrument of destruction. This exonerates law while exposing sin's malicious cunning. The parallel to Eve's deception underscores sin's universal pattern of exploiting God's word to produce rebellion.

Historical Context

Paul's Adam/Eve language would resonate with his Jewish audience, who understood Genesis 3 as the paradigmatic sin-narrative. The serpent didn't attack God's word directly but twisted it to arouse desire and promise autonomy. Similarly, sin doesn't make people hate God's law but uses it to provoke rebellion and produce death.
