

Ruth 2:23

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

So she kept fast by the maidens of Boaz to glean unto the end of barley harvest and of wheat harvest; and dwelt with her mother in law.

Analysis

The chapter concludes: 'So she kept fast by the maidens of Boaz to glean unto the end of barley harvest and of wheat harvest; and dwelt with her mother in law'. Ruth followed Naomi's counsel, remaining in Boaz's fields throughout both harvests—about seven weeks. The phrase 'dwelt with her mother in law' emphasizes Ruth's covenant loyalty continuing beyond the hopeful beginning. She didn't abandon Naomi once provision was secured but remained committed. This period of sustained provision while living together allowed relationship development with Boaz while demonstrating Ruth's faithful character through consistent choices.

Historical Context

The mention of both barley and wheat harvests spanning seven weeks creates temporal framework for the narrative. During this time, Ruth and Boaz would have had regular contact, allowing mutual observation of character. Ancient courtship, particularly for widows, involved careful assessment of character and family compatibility. The narrative's pace—extended time for relationship development before marriage—demonstrates biblical wisdom that genuine love requires time to observe consistent character, not merely initial attraction. Ruth's continued dwelling with Naomi showed her loyalty wasn't temporary emotion but sustained commitment.
