

Ruth 2:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And, behold, Boaz came from Beth-lehem, and said unto the reapers, The LORD be with you. And they answered him, The LORD bless thee.

Analysis

Boaz's arrival demonstrates godly leadership. His greeting—"The LORD be with you" (YHWH immakhem)—invokes Yahweh's blessing on workers, showing faith permeated even agricultural labor. Workers respond 'The LORD bless thee', reciprocating blessing. This exchange reveals covenant community where master and servants mutually invoke God's favor, transcending mere economic relationships. Boaz models employer-employee relations characterized by mutual respect, spiritual concern, and recognition that all blessings flow from God. His piety contrasts with the judges period's apostasy, showing faithful remnants persisted.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern agriculture typically involved oppressive labor conditions. Boaz's greeting demonstrates covenant ethics transforming labor relations. Workplace invocations of Yahweh's name appear in Psalm 129:8 and reflect faithful Israelite practices. Ruth's narrative unfolds during barley harvest (April-May), when landowners needed maximum labor. Boaz combined efficiency with covenant faithfulness, treating workers as covenant partners rather than mere tools.
