

Ruth 3:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And she said, These six measures of barley gave he me; for he said to me, Go not empty unto thy mother in law.

Analysis

Evidence shown: 'And she said, These six measures of barley gave he me; for he said unto me, Go not empty unto thy mother in law'. Ruth reports Boaz's words showing his care extended to Naomi—he didn't want Ruth returning empty-handed. The large gift tangibly demonstrated Boaz's commitment and ability to provide abundantly. His concern for Naomi showed he understood that redeeming Ruth meant caring for her whole family, not just gaining a wife. This demonstrated covenant thinking—marriage joined families, creating comprehensive mutual responsibilities.

Historical Context

The phrase 'go not empty' echoed Naomi's earlier complaint that she returned from Moab 'empty' (1:21). Boaz's provision began reversing that emptiness with tangible abundance. The six measures of barley provided proof of Boaz's serious intentions—words alone might be doubted, but generous gift demonstrated genuine commitment and financial capacity to fulfill promises. Ancient Near Eastern betrothal involved gift exchanges signaling family alliance and groom's ability to provide.

Study Questions

1. What does Boaz's concern that Ruth not return empty teach about Christian generosity including those connected to primary recipients?
2. How does tangible evidence of commitment (the barley) illustrate that genuine love demonstrates itself through concrete action?
