

Ruth 3:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down.

Analysis

The encounter begins: 'And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn'. Boaz's contentment ('heart was merry') after successful harvest day shows blessing and satisfaction in God's provision. His lying at 'end of the heap' guarded the grain. 'And she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down'. Ruth approached quietly, performed the symbolic act (uncovering feet), and positioned herself humbly at his feet, awaiting his response. Her quiet approach and vulnerable positioning demonstrated proper submission and trust in Boaz's integrity.

Historical Context

Ancient harvest celebrations involved joy at successful gathering, with meals and wine shared among workers. Boaz's merry heart reflected legitimate gratitude for provision, not drunkenness as suggested by some interpreters—the narrative portrays him responding with complete moral clarity. Ruth's 'soft' or quiet approach prevented startling Boaz or alerting others, allowing private conversation about redemption. Her positioning at his feet was suppliant posture, not seductive, trusting Boaz would respond with honor befitting his reputation.
