

Song of Solomon 1:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

Analysis

---

The bridegroom continues praising the bride: Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold. The Hebrew 'lechayayikh batorim' (לְחַיִּיךְ בַּתֹּרִים, your cheeks with ornaments) and 'tsavareyikh bacharuzim' (צִמְרֵיךְ בַּחֲרוּזִים, your neck with strings of beads) describe adorned beauty. The 'rows of jewels' (torim, תֹּרִים) likely refers to beaded ornaments or plaited jewelry worn on the cheeks or head, while 'chains of gold' (charuzim, חֲרוּזִים) denotes necklaces or string-work of precious metal.

The beloved celebrates both natural beauty (cheeks, neck) and cultivated adornment (jewelry). This teaches that godly love appreciates the beloved's inherent worth and also delights in efforts to beautify. The bride has prepared herself, adorning herself for her beloved's pleasure. Spiritually, this represents the Church adorning herself with righteous deeds, virtues, and holiness for Christ (Revelation 19:7-8). The 'fine linen' of the bride is 'the righteousness of saints'—believers cultivate beauty through sanctification, adorning themselves for their Beloved.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern brides wore elaborate jewelry—head ornaments, earrings, nose rings, necklaces, bangles. Jewelry signified wealth, status, and festivity. The bridegroom's appreciation of the bride's adornment affirms her efforts to beautify herself for him. In patriarchal culture where women's value was often diminished, the beloved's detailed, appreciative praise affirms the bride's dignity and worth. Early church fathers saw the Church adorning herself with virtues—faith, hope, love, patience, kindness—making herself beautiful for Christ. The Reformers distinguished between self-righteous works (claiming merit) and sanctified living (grateful response to grace)—believers don't earn salvation but do 'adorn the doctrine' (Titus 2:10). The Puritans taught that while inner beauty surpasses outward adornment (1 Peter 3:3-4), appropriate attention to physical appearance within marriage honors one's spouse. Modern application affirms that spouses should cultivate both inner character and outward appearance as expressions of love and honor.
