

Titus 2:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

That they may teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children,

Analysis

That they may teach the young women to be sober—σωφρονίζωσιν (sophronizōsin, train/encourage/advise) describes the older women's ministry to νέας (neas, young women). The content: φιλάνδρους εῖναι (philandrous einai, to be husband-loving), φιλοτέκνους (philoteknous, child-loving). Both compound adjectives with φίλος (philos, affectionate love).

This isn't natural instinct but learned behavior requiring teaching. To love their husbands, to love their children—Christian marriage and motherhood aren't biologically automatic but cultivated virtues. The gospel transforms domestic relationships from duty or cultural expectation into worshipful vocations. Modern feminism despises this, but Paul dignifies marriage and motherhood as arenas of grace-taught godliness.

Historical Context

Arranged marriages meant many young brides barely knew their husbands. High infant mortality and lack of birth spacing made mothering physically exhausting. Without modern labor-saving devices, domestic work was grinding. The gospel didn't remove these challenges but reframed them as Spirit-empowered callings, not meaningless drudgery.

Study Questions

1. Young wives: do you cultivate affectionate love for your husband, or has dutiful obligation or contempt replaced love?
2. Mothers: do you embrace child-rearing as holy calling, or has cultural denigration of motherhood infected your attitude?
3. Older women: are you teaching younger women the beauty of biblical femininity, or have you absorbed secular feminism's contempt for domesticity?
