

Zechariah 5:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a flying roll.

Analysis

Then I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a flying roll—Zechariah's fifth vision depicts a megillāh 'āphāh (מְגִלָּה עֹפֶפֶת, 'flying scroll'). The megillāh is a rolled parchment manuscript, and 'āphāh (participle of 'ūph, עָפוּ, 'to fly') indicates autonomous movement—this scroll flies of its own accord through the air, symbolizing the self-executing nature of God's judgment. Ancient scrolls contained written decrees, laws, or prophecies. A flying scroll represents the word of God actively searching out and judging sin.

This vision shifts focus from restoration promises (visions 1-4) to purification requirements. God cleanses His land not only by removing external enemies but by purging internal sin. The scroll's flight suggests God's word can't be evaded—it pursues transgressors like a heat-seeking missile. This anticipates Hebrews 4:12-13: 'The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword... all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do.' The flying scroll fulfills Deuteronomy 28's covenant curses against covenant-breakers. Before God fully blesses restored Judah, He must execute justice against persistent sin.

Historical Context

Post-exilic Judah struggled with the same sins that caused the Babylonian exile— theft and false oaths are highlighted in verse 3-4. Despite return to the land and temple rebuilding, moral reformation lagged. Malachi (c. 430 BC) would later rebuke similar sins: robbing God (Malachi 3:8), false swearing (Malachi 3:5), and withholding tithes. The flying scroll warns that geographic return doesn't guarantee covenant blessing without heart-level repentance.
